Many students from all over the world choose to study their Master in Management (MiM, MSc, MA, MS) programs in Europe each year. Europe hosts a diverse range of countries and environments, as well as a wide range of business schools offer master's programs. The business schools in Europe are accredited by the top international accreditation organizations, including AMBA, EQUIS, and AACSB. Some of Europe's business schools are also ranked in some international rankings publications such as the Financial Times.

BENEFITS

Graduate with an MBA degree in just one year – Generally, if you decide to study full-time, an MBA in Europe may last only one year, as opposed to MBA degrees in the U.S. that are normally two years long. At some business schools or depending on the type of your Management course, the programme could last around 18 months (some of the specialized MBA programmes can last longer than one year).

Choose from a wide and diverse range of Management courses – The study programmes are more diverse in terms of content and specialisations and they continually strive to add new topics considering the latest changes in the international job market.

- General Management
- International Business
- Strategic Management
- Finance
- Marketing
- Entrepreneurship
- Operations Management
- IT Management
- Human Resources
- Consulting and many more specializations

Affordable degree tuition fees – European business schools are still more affordable with good opportunities for students to finance their business studies in Europe. Numerous scholarships and internship options available.

Develop an international business mindset – The knowledge that you gain at a European Management degree is bound to give you the proper skills to successfully achieve any goal on a professional level. Basically, a European degree prepares you for successful business in any international destination.

Small number of students in MBA classes – The student:teacher ratio is comparably less. Build an international network – European business schools bring together a large diversity in terms of student nationalities. You have the opportunity to build an international network that can later on, be transformed into a successful business partnership.
